

THE STARS ARE RIGHT

Or so the Esoteric Order of Night believes. The word on the street was that the Order is planning some ancient ritual to awaken an unspeakable evil from where it sleeps among the stars. Even if they are wrong, the blood sacrifices that they have planned will certainly go poorly for someone.

Professor Arkwright called together the Arkham Society to once more put an end to the nefarious machinations of the Order and, perhaps, finally reveal the identity of their mysterious masked leader.

Unfortunately, the Society stepped right into one of the Esoteric Order's infamous traps. Now, bound and imprisoned in a small room in the decrepit ruins of the Landmark Hotel, the Arkham Society must struggle to free themselves and put an end to the hideous plans of the Esoteric Order.

ASPECTS

- Sacrifices must be made
- No room for error

ADVANTAGES

Mastermind: Once per scene, you may give an ally a Fate Point from your pool.

ROLLING THE DICE

When you try to do something but the outcome is uncertain, you roll dice. You always roll four Fudge dice and add the result to one Skill. If you have an Aspect, Advantage, or Specialization that is useful in that situation, you can use those too.

On a result of +4 or higher, you succeed at what you are attempting. Also, for each additional +2 you get on your result (above 4) you get an extra success. This can be used to do more harm to an opponent, to create an Aspect temporarily, or to gain a Fate Point for yourself.

On a result of +3 or less, you do not succeed yet. The GM has the opportunity to complicate the situation and you might be able to try again.

SPECIALIZATIONS

A Specialization gives you a +2 bonus when you can use it. If you have Expertise in a specialization, you can change any one die to a + after you roll using that specialization. If you have Mastery, you can do the same thing but with two dice.

ADVANTAGES

An Advantage provides a benefit in specific situations. Check your Advantages area to see if you have any and what they do.

ASPECTS

There are two ways that you can use an Aspect when you are rolling dice:

- If you use as Aspect before you roll, you gain a +2 to your result.
- If you use it after you roll, you re-roll all of your dice. In either case, you must spend a Fate Point to use an Aspect.

USING FATE POINTS

Fate Points can be used in three ways:

- You can always spend a Fate Point to gain +1 to a roll.
- You can spend a Fate Point to use one of your character's Aspects.
- You can spend a Fate Point to narrate new information about a scene, with the agreement of the GM.

GAINING FATE POINTS

Fate Points can be gained in two ways:

- You may choose to gain a Fate Point when you get an additional Success on a roll. (A success used in this way gets you no other benefit.)
- Whenever you roleplay one of your character's Aspects in a way that isn't beneficial to you in a situation, you may take a Fate point.

REFRESH

The number of Fate Points that you start the game with.

HARM & CONSEQUENCES

In some situations, your character can be harmed. If an opponent successfully harms you, check off a number of boxes equal to the number of successes that they apply.

If your basic boxes are all checked off and you take more Harm than you gain a Consequence, usually an injury of some kind. Consequences also impose a penalty on any die rolls that you must make..

If all of your Consequences are checked off when you take Harm, then you are Taken Out. Your opponent decides how you are taken out. You are at their mercy, within the expectations of the situation.

Rather than be Taken Out, at any time during a conflict you can offer to concede. Tell the GM how you think that you should lose the fight. If the GM agrees, then you are out of the fight but you survive. If the GM doesn't agree, you get a Fate Point and have to keep fighting.

Typically, Consequences take a number of scenes to recover from equal to the penalty that they apply.

Example: an Unhinged Consequence would normally go away after two scenes. In some cases, the GM may decide that a Consequence lingers a little longer.
